

Naivelt ניידעלע News

Greetings

For those of you who were brave enough to spend another hot weekend at Naivelt, there were many enjoyable and educational activities to pass the time. Alan Cantor conducted his annual bagel-making workshop, producing many delicious bagels that were then quickly devoured. That evening there was a merry sing-along with UJPO's singing group, Zing! Zing! Zing! On Sunday, Gord and Christine hosted a stimulating Bagel Brunch on the controversial topic of populism. That afternoon Janice taught another relaxing yoga class, and many people turned out to beat the heat during pool time. One could also hear the sweet sounds of Music Camp beginning once again. As usual, campers have been very generous in submitting stories and photographs of Naivelt life—the photos of the toasting bagel were submitted by Guy Staughton, and the photo of the musicians was submitted by Nicole Bennett. Also, please wish Zohar, who turned 12 on Wednesday, a very happy Naivelt birthday.

Last Weekend: Music, Music, Music

Thanks to Martin's camp and the sing-along with Zing! Zing! Zing!, the hills have been alive with the sound of music. The large group photo was submitted by Shlomit Segal, and the photo of Martin and friends was submitted by Nicole Bennett.

Last Weekend: Bagel-Making with Alan

Last Saturday's bagel-making workshop with Alan Cantor was delicious and enlightening. It was all on Alan to show us the way as his cousin Sarit was unable to make it, but he did not disappoint, and assured us that no matter the obstacles, the bagels will turn out in the end. While we waited for the yeast to get the process started, the group shared their bagel experiences. We discussed the differences between Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg bagels, and when we were first introduced to bagels. Then we proceeded to create the Naivelt Bagel, which included multigrain flour, ground flaxseeds, chopped onion and garlic. We learned how to gently blend the dough so as not to disturb the gluten, and then we left it to rise for an hour. Next, we kneaded the dough and Alan demonstrated how to slice it into bagel lumps, which we then rolled into bagels. And as if the dough wasn't yummy enough already, the bagels were boiled in honey water, coated in sesame seeds or poppy seeds and a pinch of kosher salt. Then came the really hard part, waiting for them to bake in the 500F oven and be ready to eat! They were delicious and precious—lucky are those who got to taste the Naivelt 2018 Bagel!—Hilarie Klapman (Cabin 3, Hill 2)

The photo of the finished product was submitted by Alan himself; the process photos were taken by Barb Wiseman. So far this season, many photos and blurbs have been submitted, which has made the Naivelt News very beautiful (and my job just a teeny bit easier). As always, everyone is encouraged to submit content to dylangld3@gmail.com (that's g-l-d-3, with no 'o'). Thanks for the great work so far!
